INTRODUCTION

James Guillaume (London, 16 February 1844 - Paris, 20 November 1916) was the eldest son of a Swiss watchmaker from Neuchatel and a French mother, who worked as a governess in London. George Guillaume lived temporarily in England to organize the international extension of the family-business. He was a cultured man with many interests. When in 1848 the Swiss Republic came into being, he returned with his family to Neuchatel and became a public servant. From 1853 to 1886 he was a member of the city-council of Neuchatel for the Radical Party. His son James received a good education. From 1862-1864 he studied literature and history at the University of Zurich, but could not finish his studies because of lack of funds. In August 1864 he received a post as teacher of history and literature at the local highschool of Le Locle, a small industrial town not far from Neuchatel. There he continued his historical studies and became interested in the work of the Internationale Arbeiter Assoziation (I.A.A.) which was founded in London in 1864, better known as the first Socialist International. He was one of the founders of the section of Le Locle of the I.A.A. and took part in the local and international work for the Association which brought him into close contact with the Russian activist Michael Bakunin. In 1869 he married Elise Golay and he had to leave his post as a teacher because of his political engagement. In 1872, he left the I.A.A. together with Bakunin, because of the ever growing conflict with Karl Marx, who imposed his political views in the I.A.A. He subsisted by giving private lessons and translations into French of English and German novels and articles. In 1878 he moved with his family to Paris where he had found a job as collaborator of the Dictionnaire de pedagogie and became editor of a pedagogical journal. He published vastly on the history of public instruction during the French revolution, the history of the first Internationale, and he wrote articles for several leftist and syndicalist journals. He was a well-known personality in anarchist and syndicalist circles and published a biography of the Italian pedagogue Pestalozzi (1890) and several articles in learned journals and the left-wing press. After the death of his eldest daughter in 1897 he became depressed and fell dangerously ill. In a fit fit of insanity he destroyed the greater part of his library and personal papers. In 1899, he resumed his work. From 1907 onward, he worked closely together with Max Nettlau on the edition of the collected works of Michael Bakunin of which six volumes appeared at the Librairie Stock in Paris between 1895 and 1913. He remained active until the end of his life.

The Guillaume Papers were originally part of the of the collection of books and papers of the French writer Lucien Descaves (1861-1949) which was acquired by the IISH in 1936. Another part of James Guillaume's papers can be found in the Archives de l'Etat in Neuchatel (A.E.N.). Among the papers of Michael Bakunin which also repose in the IISH, many letters of Guillaume and Nettlau can be found on the subject of their cooperation on the publication of Bakunin's Collected Works.
